For a non rythm driven slapping check out acoustic guitarists in the style of Jack Johnson. He uses the slap technique frequently, songs like Taylor, Banana Pancakes, a lot of stuff off his new album. Or, you can always take songs that don't have slapping and add it in, it makes for much more interesting playing. #3 kooldood1

Tapping techniques are used by guitar players in various music genres. Most rock guitar players use a flurry of tapped notes in guitar solos for sound dynamics and aesthetic feel. Percussive techniques are used by acoustic guitar players. Every percussive guitar player has a technique and rhythmic feel that gives identity to composition.

"I acknowledge these roots, but the sound allows me to go deeper into a softer, acoustic realm," he explains. As a solo artist, he now has the freedom as a songwriter to create a quantity of songs, and then select the best ideas to complete, record and perform. Initially, he allows the lyrics and melodic ideas to exist only in his imagination.
