The power of the Delhi Sultanate in north India was shattered by the invasion (1398-99) of Turkic conqueror Timur (Tamerlane), who sacked Delhi itself. Under the Sayyid dynasty (c. 1414-51) the sultanate was reduced to a country power continually contending on an equal footing with other petty Muslim and Hindu principalities.

Historiography. Modern historical works written on Medieval India have received some criticism from scholars studying the historiography of the period. E. Sreedharan argues that, after Indian independence up until the 1960s, Indian historians were often motivated by Indian nationalism. Peter Hardy notes that the majority of modern historical works on Medieval India up until then were written ...
